“ Carolyn and I are cousins. We are related through our Dads.... the Wards. We had a lot of cousins... but we were close. Carolyn was a few months younger than me, but we were in the same grade at school. After they moved to Horatio, we ‘grew up’ together. After we got married and started our families, we didn’t see each other very often, but when we did... we made the most of our time together. It is like having a sister that you don’t get to see very often. We would stay up all night talking... remembering things from ‘back when we were kids...’.

We had a very nice visit in July when Carolyn and Tammy came to Oklahoma/Arkansas. We went to the old Ward place where our grandparents had lived. It was kinda like going back in time. We walked around soaking up the all the memories and talking our heads off about just anything and everything.

We held hands, gave each other hugs and kissed each other, promising to make plans to get together again real soon. We enjoyed being together so much. It was like we had never been apart. We enjoyed every second.

Tammy, Carolyn, Christy and I spent some time with my Dad. He answered our questions and told us stories about growing up with all his brothers and sisters. He told us that our great grandfather was buried at an old cemetery in Oklahoma. We went the cemetery to try and find the grave. We did not find the grave, but we sure had an adventure.

There were so many things we wanted to do together. We had questions about our heritage, about the lives of those who came before us in our Ward family.

I know that Carolyn knows all the answers to all our questions. She has probably been telling Gramma and Grandpa how much we loved growing up and spending time at their place as kids. We would sit and listen to Grandma tell us stories of things that happened when she was growing up and Grandpa would sit out under the old tree and whittle while we would swing on the old tire swing or on the toe-sack filled with sand that hung from that big old tree.

I know when I see Carolyn, she will have plenty of stories to tell me.

She can show me around and we will have so much fun remembering old times together.

So, See you later Carolyn 💖 I love you bunches 💖
