“Marty and I became fast friends when she pulled me aside at the dog park in the neighborhood where she had just moved. Ordinarily extremely shy, she took a chance and introduced herself. Our friendship took off from there. She was such a genuine, practical, and strong person, which made it all the more difficult to see her slipping away. Her greatest heartbreak was the loss of her beloved husband, and it was her greatest desire to be reunited with him. I'll miss her greatly, but I'm so happy for her.
